"Punch and Judy" show heads on

Jun 26, 2010

Ms Julia Gillard rose to congratulate Mr Tony Abbott on his victory as opposition leader. "Obviously, I know Tony well, we spent a lot of time chasing each other round," she said. "We were, for a while, a Punch and Judy show for Australian politics."

Mr Abbott replied, "I have even been accused from time to time of flirting with the deputy prime minister - that must cease now, of course."

The flirtatiousness the two cultivated was apparent in numerous exchanges. "Tony's being a bit naughty this morning," declared Ms Gillard on one occasion, noting to a departing presenter: "I suspect you're not going to miss waking up to Tony."

When a viewer wrote to ask if the two hated each other as much as seemed from their jousting, Mr Abbott responded: "Could I blow some kisses? Would that make it better?" He promptly did so.

Ms Gillard liked to refer to Mr Abbott as "one of those inconvenient birthday presents you can't pass on to anybody else", in recognition of the fact she inherited him as her direct opponent when he became health minister on her birthday in 2003.

And in surely one of the most unusual exchanges between two people who would eventually become the nation's alternative leaders, Mr Abbott was offered a choice between two novelty lollipops and asked: "Would you rather lick Kevin or Julia."

I'd like have concise and conceptual document, but more test codes.

Mind me one philosophy in Buddhism - knowledge can't stand writing, because once you put on the paper, you will immediately have misinterpretation, with the mind made up prejudgement. The more you write, the more mistake you will make. So the knowledge only can be passed to next generation by the individuals intellect and likemindedness.

Back to the topic, with respect, there is NO way your Documentation can survive and be passed to your "children", your "children's children", over and over, no matter how AGILE it is. The point of shit loading we mock up doc daily is can leave some hope to people who take over the work, let them alive before the end of life cycle of the project. Every project is going to die, documentation too.

Housing market a 'time bomb', says investment legend - THE Australian and British housing markets are the last two bubbles left in the wake of the financial crisis, and it is only a matter of time before they crash, warns legendary US investor and co-founder of global investment management firm GMO, Jeremy Grantham.

Jeremy Grantham On Existing & Developing Bubbles - Grantham mentions that there are several existing bubbles still in play; real estate markets in the UK and Australia as well as two that could form in the coming years: commodities and emerging market equities. He suggests that it is possible to ride the emerging market bubble because of the slow economic growth in developed countries.

Terrence Miao - There are about 100,000 iPhone applications, how many people install on their iPhone, 100 - 200? how many applications people use very often, 10 - 20?

More questions, how many people are sophisticated enough who understand what the best way to have a smart phone?

If you just make a phone call, SMS someone to keep contact, any mobile phones on the market can do.

Are you going to do your office work on mobile phone? Don't worry, Microsoft Office already have mobile version. But people who do it must have brain damaged.

Reading news, and books, why not read newspaper and a real book. They are content rich, easier to your eyes, easy to carry, fold and depose. And Telstra will never send you a huge bill.

The point is many people who bought iPhone don't know how to "cook" with it. They just follow the main street, and believe it's fashion to have a iPhone in hand and make you look cool. How many times I saw people with their iPhone on the public transportation just play games.

Of course I won't refuse if company offer me free iPhone and pay the unlimited phone bill for me. Free lunch is always taste better than the food you have to pay for. Jun 7, 2010 iPhone 5th generation.

Yes, the iPhone 5G will run on Due Core Snapdragon process 1.5G Hz. And you can watch High Definition Video (1080p) on it. No need to convert your illegal Top Gear download to get damed Apple QuickTime format.

Please put your hand up if still want to upgrade or buy the new iPhone, anyone?

Mike Nguyen - You can buy it outright for ~750. I think you can haggle JB down to 700 or with additional accessories (eg. 8G micro SD). Will try to see if I can connect an Optus SIM card to it tonight. I'm currently using iPrimus $10 a month SIM card. It uses the Telstra network though. Jun 7, 2010

"I've paid tax all my life – the Australian Government will look after me" says one of so many financially handicapped taxpayers

Actually, in 70', 80' in Australia, there were 7.5 workers funding each retiree. Today there are 5. By the time when X, Y, or Z generations hit retirement it's projected that there will be just 2.7 workers throwing money into the pot for each retiree.

That's why getting your superannuation sorted – regardless of your age – is the most important and relatively easier thing, comparing to any other investment vehicles, you can do.

Being to PMA Australia Digital Life Expo 2010 today. Try the Panasonic 3D TV. This is the first time 3D technology experience for me.

Putting on 3D view glasses, feeling dizziness and nausea just after a few minutes. You can see there are 3D objects in depth and tell the difference between the traditional TV and 3D TV. But the picture looks so unreal, and the 3D objects look so unnatural. There is just no gradual change in perspective. You can see the 3D objects are isolate in the picture. There are no relationships between them. I reckon even today's games which rendered by 3D engine, or a painting, and a printed photo can let you feel more genuine than the job a 3D TV does.

Well, the market is turning to 3D Home Theater now, on the expensive and undoubted immature technology. High technologies can't create new economy, but can generate bigger bubbles beyond your imagination, like iPhone, iPad, Twitter and Facebook.

Stay back, just watch and let suckers in first. You can let the monkeys invest their own peanuts.

BTW, this year Digital Life Expo is in the same time slot with Good Food and Wine show, and in the same Exhibition Center.

After the Expo, you walk along with people out of Food and Wine show who carrying wine bottles and sampling glasses. Some of them are apparently intoxicated, and yelling in the hall way. A bit shocked that exhibition organisers are untasted to put art and drunkenness on the the same platform. I wonder what people will react if two brothels opened up along side with NGV - National Gallery Victoria on the St Kilda road!

Borrowing and having first taste iPad 3G, the biggest version iPhone on its debut day in Australia from a friend.

The screen is stunning beautiful. The weight is bit heavier than I expect. The size is a bit awkward, not too big you can do everything, and not small enough that you can put anywhere.

Can't play flash! Video on The Age and BBC are all dead. But OK on Porn websites. People who developed the websites seems to be a Mac person. All the video are QuickTime format.

Final conclusion, not very impressed, because lack of a lot innovations. It's not surprise if you think Apple only like to offer half baked food to customers. The first generation of a new product always comes with design faults and software bugs. If you don't believe that, ask people who bought first generation iPod and iPhone. Are they still alive?

Being an apple fan won't make you superior and instantly cool. Apple's products are never for sophisticated people. Shining an iPhone in the public just make you look too yuppie and too gay.

$1000 maybe too dear to feed up Apple. There are better options where you can invest such amount money to the future, or to our children, and to our children's children.

Liked by: Kieran Simpson

Angelos Megremis - I had a play with it at JB on Friday night.

I can see a use for it. The most important thing about it is that it is fun to use, which is what got the iPhone to where it is today.

I see no reason for a 3G version, unless 3G offers the same battery life as WiFi.

I am a bit tempted by it. Speaking for myself, it would be an awesome platform to show a portfolio to a potential customer. Plus, I couldn't get Zoe to put it down once she got hooked onto some game.

I can't justify the asking price. If the entry point was at the AU$400 mark, I would have walked out of JB with a base model.

(I am also not sure how it will fare once the novelty factor goes) May 29, 2010

Kieran Simpson - The novelty factor is important (IMHO). What's the use of paying $$ for something that you don't use after 10 minutes? May 30, 2010

Terrence Miao - Input and output, you really need change your mindset on iPad.

The soft touch screen keyboard is bigger now, but it's still not closed to the full size traditional QWERTY keyboard which designed for ten fingers. The only thing I can see is the smile on people who does one finger typing. Also there is no voice input like Google demonstrated in Android 2.2 in Google I/O 2010. Well, iPad definitely not a writer friendly device.

Another issue is how to print in iPad. You can't connect a printer via wireless (and no USB port) to print a few pages you like in iBook, or an article in newspaper, e.g., The Australian even you has paid full newspaper subscription fee. How do you organise, index all the stored information in iPad under your finger is another question. Apple is not good at searching. Apple can't pick Google, but without many options, has to take long time rival Microsoft Bing as the default search on iPhone.

One thing I agree that iPad has brought the revolution in publishing. Have a look how thinner and empty today's newspapers and magazines you can realise what our life have changed drastically by the internet, smartphones and social network. However, as a frugal saver, a canny spender, and a stingy geek, I will wait for rivalry products, maybe Google's gPad comes out, and then make my final verdict. May 30, 2010

Mike Nguyen - Sounds like someone's a closet Apple fanboi!

Britain's new finance minister George Osborne once came under fire after a newspaper published a photo of him with a former prostitute 12 years previously, standing in front of what looked like cocaine. He strongly denied any wrongdoing.

A bigger row broke out in 2008 when it emerged he was present at an attempt to solicit Tory donations from a Russian oligarch while on a yacht on holiday in Corfu. Mr Osborne admitted 'it didn't look good', but again he strongly denied any wrongdoing.

It is true that the Greek politicians are much to blame for the current situation, and no doubt many of them are thieves; yet their real crime was not stealing but offering a substantial proportion of the Greek population a standard of living that was economically unjustified, maintained for a time by borrowing, and in the long run unsustainable, in return for votes. The crime of that substantial proportion of the Greek population was to accept the bribe the politicians offered; they were only too prepared to live well at someone else's expense.

It is perhaps an inherent problem wherever the universal franchise is unaccompanied by widespread virtues such as honesty, self-control, providence, prudence and self-respect. Greece is therefore a cradle not only of democracy, but also of democratic corruption.

It is an obvious but often forgotten lesson of economics: what cannot continue will not continue.

WTF? Let's face it -- if you had a never-ending stack of cash and a computer room with no particular size constraints, you too would own a Thermaltake Level 10 enclosure. Regrettably, both financial and square footage constraints do indeed play major roles in most of our lives, including one Jeffrey Stephenson. This fine gentleman is quickly becoming the Ben Heck of wood-grained mods, this time cranking out a lovingly crafted iteration of the aforesaid chassis, but with that special wooden flair. The Level Eleven gets its inspiration from the gargantuan Level 10, but rather than taking things even bigger, Jeff decided to scale things down a notch; in fact, he constructed a fully functional PC within the handmade enclosure, all based around a VIA Pico-ITX mainboard and a 1.2GHz VIA Nano CPU. Thanks to the onboard VX855 media processor, this (comparatively) diminutive machine boasts an HDMI output and enough horsepower to pump out 1080p sans lag -- but it doesn't seem as if this bad boy is officially for sale. Not that he'd reject a five-figure offer or anything...

Fined for balls up

A court has ordered a hospital in northern Italy to pay $263,000 to a man after surgeons removed a healthy testicle by mistake.

The plaintiff, who was 27 at the time of the botched operation in 2004, had a tumour in the left testicle but it was the healthy one that was removed, the Arena di Verona newspaper reported.

The surgeons quickly realised their mistake and removed the left testicle as well, the report said.

Mike Nguyen - I hear you've given up light beers as well! Seriously, how on earth did you get into the country?? Besides, naming the top 8 footy teams, I reckon new migrants must finish at least a 6-pack VB stubbies before admittance. Failing that - you're not Australian enough! Mike Nguyen - The Greeks' rebuttal was a reminder of the Germany's occupation in WW2 & they're yet to receive any cents in compensations from their oppressors. Which is all fine if it was actually the Germans that invaded them. I think Italy initially did, but like the Africa campaign, the Germans had to help out. I must say, Crete got hit the hardest though. Those German paratroopers are apparently more fanatic than the SS. Mar 8, 2010

在他大四那年，由于他一直在一个固定的教室上自习，注意到一个也一直在那个教室上自习的女孩。而且，很巧的是，那个女孩每次都坐在他前面。他越来越喜欢她，但是，内向的他却不敢有任何举动，只是每晚默默注视她的背影。

大四第二学期，已经不用上自习了，为了心爱的女孩，他依然每天自习。

当他把秘密告诉舍友们后，其它6个哥们一致决定帮他走出第一步。于是，那天晚上，7个人一起去了教室。但是，无论舍友们怎么鼓励他他就是没有勇气走出关键的第一步，舍友们无奈地说：“看来我们也帮不了你了，自己努力吧。”

回到宿舍，他彻夜难眠，痛定思痛，决定第二天无论如何也要向他心爱的姑娘表白。

第二天晚上，他如期见到了她。经过了心潮澎湃、坐如针毡等等过程，内心的两个小人儿激烈大战了1800回合，最后，浪漫的骑士胜利了。

他递给姑娘一张纸条：“你好！我注意你很长时间了。你是一个温柔漂亮的姑娘，我能和你做个朋友吗？”

女孩看完纸条，开始收拾书本，完毕，站起来转身问他：“我要走了，你要不要和我一起走？”

接下来，他说了一句也许是他一生中说过的最经典的话：

“你先走吧。我还有几页书没看完。”

Re: @Dean Budd Software Engineering is an art... not a science...

Terrence Miao - With respect, pragmatism, or dogmatism are ALL suck here. To one-hole-in-and-one-hole-out theory, only works when you live in a world is sitting on one point; to multiple-exit-strategy theory, the more holes let you dig out, but most likely you will be trapped yourself inside the more complicated maze you create.

As Deano points out Software Engineering is an art... not a science... As for art, it's all about balance, on the balance of usability and agility of the technology.

If we raise Software Engineering to philosophical level, Left and Right are all incongruent to nature. The middle way is the most likely to go (exit?), under any situation. Feb 24, 2010
